Hello, Alex! I'm happy to seeing your letter now. Sorry I didn't answer earlier, I was so busy. I glad you're OK!

So, in your letter you asked me about our meeting. Honestly, I don't know what kind of places I would like to visit. Maybe some parks or shops? Or anything else? I just want to see you because I miss you so much! And your family is so friendly. I love your mom and dad, they're so sweet.

I think the hire bikes better than public transport. I don't like when it's a lot of people. By the way, I want to buy a new bike for many years.

Well, I'd better to go now as, I should walk with my dogs. See you soon!

Best wishes,

Varvara

READING

Time 40 minutes

Task: Read the passage. Do the task 1, task 2 which go after the text.

Have a happy staycation!?

Short of money, time or just energy? Fed up of being ripped-off at hotels, restaurants and theme parks? Tired of getting stuck in endless traffic jams and airport queues? Then a staycation may just be the thing for you. Adapted from the word vacation, a 'staycation' is becoming the trend for families who opt to stay at home during their summer break. And it can be more fun than you might think.

My family and I have been 'staycationing' for the last couple of years. At first my kids went wild at the thought of not going abroad. What on earth would they tell their friends or put on their Facebook profile at the end of the summer? But then they realised they wouldn't have to put up with an exhausting journey, sharing a room with siblings, communication problems and endless arguments over the plans for each day. Suddenly, exploring the area near their own home and being able to hang out with their friends seemed like heaven.

Basically, as with any family activity, it's all in the planning. Don't expect to have a successful break by just staying at home and hoping that something interesting will happen. Here are a few pointers to get you started:

1. D..... Schedule a beginning and ending to make your staycation seem like a 'real' holiday. Otherwise, it might end up feeling like a series of days just hanging around at home.	4A..... Most colleges and sports centres run summer schools that offer a wide range of courses. Have a go at something the whole family can enjoy - pottery, cookery, local wildlife - whatever takes your fancy. Explore your own backyard
2...B..... That means no housework, no paperwork and no homework. You are on holiday, after all	Take the time to explore the area near where you live. Walking or cycling is a great way to enjoy the scenery without

3.E..... Have a daily activity in mind and a back-up in case the weather changes. Let each member of the family choose what they would like to do for at least one afternoon ... and make sure the others go along with it. Check out what's free. Everything from bike rides in the countryside to family fun days in the local park. Pack your own picnic and set a budget for treats like ice creams, boat trips.	adding to your carbon footprint. 5.F..... Add up all the money you're saving on travel and accommodation and treat the family to something really nice. It could be a banquet-style takeaway, a fancy dress party, or an evening out. 6.C..... Take photos or videos, just as you would if you went away from home for your holiday. Remember your kids will want something to show their friends, and you will want to keep those staycation memories too.
